Abstract:

You are or will be teaching your classes in English in the near future contributing to the internationalisation of teaching and learning at universities. How can you prepare for this task with focus on language, didactics and methods? How can you support your students to study in English? Especially when neither you, nor your students are English native speakers? In this workshop, you will get ideas, materials, and practise opportunities to boost your preparation, performance, and evaluation of courses in English. You can advance your teaching skills in English, thereby promoting your students' learning skills in English, in a Blended Learning-format: additional to your face-to-face-learning, you can optionally make use of online-learning to build on your expertise in Academic Higher Education. In the workshop, you will extend your individual repertoire, i.e. by working on didactically-focussed presentations and receiving feedback on these. In the online-phases, you can reflect on your personal demands, self-made materials and presentations with the trainer 1:1. The final workshop-day will be set like a congress, so that the learning outcomes of the workshop can be experienced.
